IS RAW MILK SAFE?

Allan R. Magie, Ph.D., M.P.H.

Recent years have witnessed a return to "natural foods." Among the promoted products that are supposed to contribute to better health is raw or unpasteurized milk.

Pasteurization has been one of the most important steps in protecting the public's health from milk-transmitted diseases. Pasteurized milk has rarely been linked to such human illnesses as salmonellosis, brucellosis, tuberculosis, Q fever, typhoid fever, shigellosis, and streptococcal disease. In countries where milk is not routinely pasteurized milk-borne transmission of these diseases remains a significant problem.

Two facts are important to remember: (1) Adults do not need milk. No other animal drinks milk beyond the weaning stage. (2) Raw milk would be a good product if it did not contain disease organisms.

Proponents of raw milk claim that pasteurization, besides killing certain bacteria, also "kills" certain nutrients. It alters, they claim, protein, destroys "certain vitamins" and reduces the level of available minerals. Let's look at these claims.

Alters protein. It is well known that heat destroys enzymes, but whether they are necessary to remain healthy is debatable. The human body produces all the enzymes it requires for normal function. The acid in the stomach destroys most food enzymes anyway.

Destroys vitamins. The main ones mentioned are A, C, and some of the B complex. Actually there is not enough vitamin C in milk to prevent scurvy. Citrus fruits, tomatoes and other fresh fruits and vegetables contain ample amounts. The same arguments apply to the other vitamins.

Reduces available minerals. Although there is some question whether it is less available after pasteurization, calcium, a mineral needed by everyone and one of the main minerals supplied by milk, is also abundantly found in other foods.

What about the health risks of using raw milk? In California, one of the states where use of unpasteurized milk is strongly promoted, at least 2,150 cases of salmonellosis (an intestinal infection caused by a bacterium) resulted last year from its use. The actual number of human victims is undoubtedly much greater than reported. (Experience has shown that there are at least 100 cases that go undiagnosed and reported for every diagnosed case.) While not growing any faster or "better," children drinking raw milk suffer significantly more from diptheria, scarlet fever, intestinal disturbances and rickets. Even calves raised on pasteurized milk did as well as those given raw milk.

Don't take unnecessary risks. If you drink milk, make it pasteurized!

Heights Cause Ills

Planning a trip to the mountains to get away from the heat for a week or so? So are several million other American families at this time of year.

If you're headed for some really high mountains, above 7,000 feet, it would be wise to make the change gradually to avoid "high altitude sickness." Anyone who has made a trip to Mexico City can tell you of his or her troubles in this respect.

Try, if you can manage it, to make the ascent over a span of days so that your body can adjust to the oxygen-poor thin air of higher elevations, the American Medical Association cautions.

Symptoms of high-altitude sickness are drowsiness, headache, blueness of the nails, lips, nose and ears, a feeling of warmth and flushing of the face soon after arrival, troubled sleep, irritability and shortness of breath.

If you are flying rapidly to a high altitude destination such as Mexico City, more than 7,000 feet, there are precautions you can take to prevent distress. Before departure, get a good night's rest and avoid alcoholic beverages and heavy smoking. A good breakfast an hour or so before departure is all right, but avoid food during the trip. And avoid alcoholic drinks in flight.

Reduce physical activity during the trip. Sit quietly as much as possible. After arrival in the high altitude area, go to bed for a few hours and eat very lightly. Indulge in only light physical activity for the first 24 hours. Walk, don't run, if you have to climb steps to the hotel or lodge.

Patients with certain heart and respiratory conditions may encounter more serious discomfort by abrupt changes to high altitudes. However, physicians have noted that most people with heart or lung problems who can move around and engage in moderate activity at sea level most often can tolerate altitudes of 7,000 to 8,000 feet without serious effects.

The Times-Virginian regrets that constantly increasing costs, particularly for newsprint and postage are forcing an increase in our yearly subscription rates.

Our last increase was in October of 1978. Since then the cost of newsprint has gone up twice, from $320 per ton to $345 per ton.

Postage rates for newspapers, as well as magazines, have increased dramatically in recent years. These increases have totalled 413 per cent since 1971. The most recent increase was 22 per cent the first week of July.

Other operating costs have increased as well, leaving the Times-Virginian no choice except to ask our readers to share with us these additional expenses.

For our local subscribers, the annual rate of $7.50 means that the actual cost of each issue is less than 15c.

We share with our readers a great dismay at these, and many other price increases. We find no alternative but to ask the continued support and understanding from our readers, as we endeavor to produce the best newspaper possible at the most reasonable price.
